

Senate revisions up for ratification

Open meeting to discuss amendments; 150 affirmative votes necessary

The ratification of the minor alterations to the revised constitution suggested by the Senate is the main item on the agenda at today's Students' Society open meeting to take place at 1 pm in the Union Ballroom. If 150 votes in favour of the proposed amendments are cast at the meeting, the matter will be put to the campus in a referendum at tomorrow's election.

As well, all potential holders of major Students' Society positions will be given the opportunity to present their platforms and to answer any queries from the audience.

New business may also be brought up, and if a quorum (300 students) is present, motions may be officially passed.

the proposed revisions

The following amendments to the proposed new Constitution were proposed by the Senate on February 17, and will be presented for ratification at today's open meeting.

Article 8, section 2, subsection F is to be reworded to read: "Three representatives from students in the Arts and Science section of the Faculty of Arts and Science, at least one of whom is pursuing a Bachelor of Science degree and one of whom is pursuing a Bachelor of Arts degree."

The words "Students in the" are to be added to Article 8, section 2, subsection G which will now read "two representatives from students in the Faculty of Graduate Studies and Research."

Article 8, section 5 will be left as it was in the old Constitution, the ceiling on Students' Council-imposed fines remaining at $25.

Article 12, section 6, subsection B will read "Comptroller of the University will be Comptroller of the Students' Society."

University Band concert

Broadway, polkas, marches

The University Band will present an evening of concert band music tomorrow at 8 pm in Moyse Hall.

Choral Society hosts three-choir festival

The Choral Society will present a Tri-Choral Festival in conjunction with two other universities Saturday evening at 8:15 in the Currie Gymnasium.

Other choirs participating in the concert are the Deep Purples of Bishop's University and the Queen's University Interfaculty Choir. The Martlets will also make an appearance.

Tickets at $1.50 are available at the Union Box Office and at the door, and all ticket holders are invited to a party in the Officers' Mess after the concert.

The concert, which is open to the campus and the public without charge, will feature marches and polkas in the old-fashioned tradition of Sousa, selections from Broadway productions such as "My Fair Lady" and "Camelot", and theme music from movies like "Exodus" and "Windjammer".

The programme will also include classical adaptations from Borodin and Rossini and military and symphonic suites.

Formed last year, the University Band comprises students from all faculties on campus, including two from the Faculty of Music. Under the directorship of Dr. P. Wilcox and Cy Cooper, it has performed at Convocation.

Hughes sees pattern

Quebec changes not unique

by ANACLETO PELLEGRINI

"The things happening here are of the same kind as changes going on, at various rates and with perhaps minor differences, in other great urban and industrial centers," Dr. Everett C. Hughes, Professor of Sociology at Brandeis University, told a Redpath Hall audience last night. Dr. Hughes was speaking on "French Canada Still in Transition".

This was the second of the E.R. Adair Lectures on French Canada. Hughes is presently a Visiting Professor in the French Canada Studies Programme.

Commenting on the growth of the Province, Dr. Hughes stated that "French Canada is in the later phase of industrialization" and that there is no "problem of getting a basic labour force for industry from a non-industrial population."

Dr. Hughes explained that there is a native pool of a non-industrial population large enough to supply the demand for new labour created by new industries. This contrasts with the situation in most other regions on the North American continent, which in the past gained their work force by migration.

He further added that new European immigrants to the Montreal area are "perhaps already accustomed to city and industrial life", thereby making the change easier.

"Industrial migration", he noted, "has given Quebec a great urban population which is culturally and linguistically homogeneous." Dr. Hughes affirmed that "if the suggestion that a large number of Quebec farms should be abandoned were carried out, the people who operate them would be in the same box as the demand for professional and quasi-professional people and that the demand will overtax the present school system. Therefore, he concluded that there would have to be a centralization of power and resources to meet the increased costs.

—Ian Weirill

DR. EVERETT C. HUGHES

Southerners, white and coloured, who are coming to Chicago, Detroit and New York, today."

He ended this part of his lecture by stating that French Canada, like other highly industrialized regions, has the problem of adjusting herself to a new phase of the urban and industrial world.

Dr. Hughes stated that in such regions there will be a greater

Elizabethan scenes begin three-day run

An Elizabethan Miscellany, this term's English Department production, opens tonight at 8:30 in the Leacock Auditorium (H-132).

A compendium of scenes of the Elizabethan age, Miscellany, which runs until Saturday, includes scenes from plays by little-known writers, as well as many from Shakespeare.

Tickets at $1.50 for all three performances are still available at the Union Box Office, and for tonight only, students can obtain two tickets for the price of one.

TGIF to raise funds for LaSalle victims

The Phi Epsilon Pi Fraternity House will be the scene tomorrow afternoon of a TGIF party, the proceeds from which will go to victims of the Ville LaSalle disaster.

Open from 3:30 to 6:30, the benefit dance will feature liquid refreshment, music by a local group, and recorded sounds.

Phi Ep House is located at 3559 University.

erratum

In yesterday's front-page discussion of the roles of the vice-presidents, External Vice-Presidential candidate Ken Cabatoff was reported to have said that the goals of the External Vice-President "must include membership in UGEQ so that UGEQ be representative of all Quebec students". This should have included the qualification "when this becomes compatible with membership in CUS and the guarantee of our linguistic rights."

Other candidates for the position are Mark Feifer and Philip Resnick.

Secret Ring rite honours engineers

In a colorful, secret ceremony yesterday, 165 Engineers were awarded with iron rings.

The honoured engineers include the entire graduating class, other senior students in the faculty, and several new professors. The rings symbolize the engineers' pledge to maintain professional ethics, and for the graduates, also mark the culmination of five years of hard work.

This is the forty-third year that the ceremony, which was drawn up by poet and novelist Rudyard Kipling and is characteristic of Canadian engineers, has taken place.

True to form, the engineers went out after the ceremony and had a bash.

SNOW AND ICE

fell on the roof of some unfortunate employee's car yesterday, with the predictable catastrophic results, outside Redpath Museum yesterday. The incident proved two things: that people should read signs after all, and that parking on campus has very definite drawbacks. The owner of the car was unavailable for comment.

Fear or freedom?

It is interesting to reflect on the reasons for today's Open Meeting. It is the last in the current academic year; it is being called in order to put to the Students' Society certain minor changes to the new Constitution. These changes were suggested by the Senate. Some of the Senate's suggestions have already been turned down by the SEC.

Although the suggested changes being brought to the Open Meeting are more formal than substantive, one of the rejected suggestions would have implied that the Senate felt it had the right to change the Students' Society Constitution. Should the Senate have this right? Should ratification of the new Constitution by the Senate be a necessary process even if the changes are a mere formality? Even when the Senate, as in this case, goes through the proper channels — that is, through the President of the Students' Society? This, of course, is not the issue at today's meeting; nevertheless it is something that students should be thinking about.

That it has not been thought about is, in our view, unfortunate. Yet the lack of thought is understandable: the SEC has not considered it because the general body of students has not asked them to. Seen in this light, the question of who is to preserve student autonomy becomes a question of mutual responsibility. And student autonomy is not something that one receives because it is there; it has first of all to be deserved and afterwards defended. We think that the autonomy we have is deserved; but we further feel that it has to be defended. The proper form that such a defence should take is not, most certainly not, to wonder whether our deliberations will meet with the Senate's approval — it is not the function of the SEC to indulge in wild guessing games. The best defence is to continue to extend the practice of these freedoms that we do have. It is a basic fact of political life that nothing disappears faster than unused freedom.

Of housemaids and unemployment

Like sex, or the weather, good taste is a topic on which everyone likes to think he is something of an authority. Often the manifestos issued by the Establishment on what constitutes good taste serve less to clarify than to expose the most nasty kinds of repression lurking in the depths of the psyche, thus providing amateur Freudians with a field day. One recalls with particular fondness the interpolation of a learned judge during the Lady Chatterley trials in London to the effect that the publication of Lawrence's book might have the most unspeakable consequences for housemaids who read it, a comment which illustrates the well-known sociological dictum that the upper classes regard the working orders as a smouldering hot bed of sexuality waiting to be released — in fact, a kind of Byron syndrome.

Realizing that we may be displaying our own repressions, we nevertheless question the good taste of the poster currently appearing on campus which is headed "Mixed Bathing for the Unemployed?" As an attempt to draw large audiences to the deliberations of the SCM, no doubt such a trompe-l'oeil is effective. Nevertheless, unemployment is something we do not find it easy to treat either funnily or flippantly. We suggest that the PR men on the SCM try to dream something else up.

WUS REPORT (2):

Algeria: Problems and Solutions

Algeria is a country torn between old and new, at the same time clinging to its Arabic-Islamic heritage, and yet being forced to adapt to a changing way of life. The Algeria of the Mozabites and the teeming Casbah of Algiers is a far cry from the Algeria of modern French oil refineries, high rise apartment buildings and modern highways.

Similarly, although the government is pressing for countless breaks with the past (notably the abolition of the veil, and the equality of women), it is not hard to find, especially in the more rural districts, the ubiquitous influence of age-old tradition.

The seven long years of war have taken their toll and left the government with a batch of serious problems to contend with. The destruction of close to 6,000 villages has led to a sharp increase in the already prevalent urban trend. Hundreds of rural folks have flocked to the cities with neither skills nor money, and swelled the ranks of the unemployed. These people live in the outskirts of Oran, Algiers, and particularly, Constantine in unbelievably wretched conditions.

With the withdrawal of the vast majority of European settlers, Algeria has lost her essential technical and professional force. This is felt strongly throughout industry and agriculture where inexperienced hands must rapidly make the transition to the managerial level; it is felt in the legal profession where due to the shortage of qualified lawyers former clerks now act as judges. But nowhere is this loss more strongly felt than in the medical profession. There is less than 1 doctor per 10,000 people (as compared with approximately 1 per thousand in Canada) and a fatality rate of 1 out of 3 on the operating table.

When the French left Algeria, they took away with them not only their talents, but, perhaps, still more important, their capital goods. Everywhere one goes, one sees the effects of this lack of money and machinery — apartment buildings only half finished, roads paved only part of the way, and farms worked largely by manual labour. Were it not for the massive aid the French Government is even now supplying Algeria, the added financial difficulties the country would be forced to face would be enormous.

The great hope of the government in all of these areas lies in education. By providing a "cadre" of qualified personnel, it hopes, not only to counter the overwhelming 63% illiteracy, but to fill the great industrial void, and ease the vast unemployment problem by teaching the needed skills. Thirty percent of the budget is being used in this massive effort to educate the populace. Teachers are being imported from France, and from other Arab countries. Graduates of primary school level — both male and female — are being trained as "monitors" or teachers at the lower levels, being educated themselves at summer schools, and by means of monthly publications.

Increased emphasis is being placed everywhere on Arab awareness — with more hours being devoted in school to studies of Algerian history, culture, and language.

Despite this gigantic effort, however, it is estimated that a million and a half children will still not be able to attend school this year, and not until 1974 will there be enough schools to meet the demand.

Finally, Algeria, like many of the underdeveloped countries is faced with the real problem of population explosion. This is due to two reasons: a combination of high birth rate and vastly improved public health measures (instituted by the French) which has greatly reduced the infant mortality rate. At the present rate of birth, a 3% per annum increase in the population is feared, and one of the measures which the government has instituted has been to proscribe marriage before the age of 15 years. A result of this high birth rate, too, has been that Algeria is an extremely young nation: 53% of the population being under 21 years of age. And the high birth rate, in turn, coupled with the loss of one million adults during the war has left many children homeless, and has increased the problems of orphanism and of juvenile delinquency.

The prospects for the future? This is hard to say. Certainly, despite his troubles, President

Ben Bella inspires a large personal following. Furthermore, even his critics (and we met several) are quick to admit that although they may disagree with his policies, his personal integrity is beyond reproach.

But is this enough? It seems that the big question is whether Ben Bella will be able to control his dissenters, not only by ferreting them out and putting them away (as he has, of course, done with some) but by being able to attract foreign capital to his country, and improve the economic situation. For him, the only answer for economic progress is a brand of socialism based on Islamic philosophy and a Marxist economic approach. "We are Arabs primarily", he says. "We do not share the materialist conception of history... We conceive of socialism as being a technical and economic instrument".

However, on the other side of the coin, the Marxist, anti-West lingo in the Algerian papers, the subtle changing of the F.L.N. (the only party in Algeria) from a revolutionary party of all Algerians to a select elite, the "avant-garde" of the people, and the growing trend of atheism all seem to point to a tendency to follow the Communist line.

The ultimate fate lies in the balance. What will happen? Only time will tell.

Election Irregular?

Dear Madam,

In the Daily of Tuesday, March 2, there appeared a rather innocuous statement to the effect that the race for a certain position had been decided by acclamation. This was followed by an explanation that this was the result of a change in the by-laws which had rendered an alternative candidate ineligible.

I believe that the student body is deserving of a much fuller explanation. In particular, one would like to know the exact timing of the passage of this by-law. Is it an honest coincidence or an example of political machination at its worst?

I would also like to point out that there is perhaps a more subtle point which may be overlooked without further discussion. There is a tacit assumption here that a by-law limiting the presidency of an organization to one of a select number of 'in' people is good for the student population as a whole. I feel that in fact the opposite is true. It may result in a spate of uncontested elections in the future. The situation will be such that the 'establishment' can effectively handpick one candidate who can then be offered for election without opposition from the campus at large. In fact, a by-law of this type lends itself easily to the perpetuation of control of the organization by a small group.

A. Held, Ph.D. 3.

Dinsdale sees chance of PC election victory

by AARON SARNA

The Hon. Walter Dinsdale, former Conservative Minister of Northern Affairs and Natural Resources said yesterday that he anticipates another stalemate election in Canada with a more-than-even chance for a Conservative victory.

At a press conference held at Sir George Williams University the Brandon MP stated: "If we have another stalemate election, we will have an integration of political parties. Subject to the practical political situation, the Social Credit and Conservative Parties could unite."

Dinsdale did not say when an election would take place, but he did note that the Liberals are prepared to go to the country should the minor parties withdraw their confidence. The extent of government involvement in the spectacular Rivard affair, yet to be determined by the Dorion Inquiry, may be the deciding factor, he hinted.

Questioned on the Government White Paper on the constitutional amendment formula tabled in the Commons on Tuesday, Dinsdale said the Conservatives would "in no circumstances agree to 'defederation'."

He described the recent preliminary report of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism as having "stirred up more controversy than solutions", and reiterated his party's preference for a federal-provincial conference to resolve the Canadian crisis.

In his address to SGWU students, Dinsdale stated that "our political leaders must submerge their extreme viewpoints for the greater benefit of the nation." He said Canada must return to the traditional two-party system to eliminate the "social confusion" in the country.

He dismissed talk of abolishing the monarchy — "The only thing holding us together in pre-Confederation and post-Confederation times has been the constitutional sovereign," and said the US is handicapped by a republican form of government because the President has to be both a ceremonial and an executive head.

A championship looms:

Indian hoopsters lead series

by ELLY Q.

It took all year but we finally have a winning team in a major sport. The Indian Basketball squad clobbered the Georgians last night 57-42 in a see-saw, scrappy game, the first in a two game total-point final playoff for the championship. The fifteen point cushion should be enough to ensure a Junior Varsity sweep.

IT'S IN! Indians in white, Peter Small no. 42 and Merv Sabey no. 11, wait in vain for a rebound, jockeying for position with Larry Dallas of Sir George.

Peter Small and Ron Young led the Red and White to the win, scoring 15 and 12 points respectively. John Padden and Merv Sabey also contributed strong efforts. Small seemed to be everywhere on the court; he grabbed rebounds, potted from almost anywhere and proved the team leader. Young, playing with a broken nose, revitalized the squad and scored many important points throughout the contest. Padden managed to score 7 points before he retired at the end of the first half with a charley-horse.

Behind 29-20 at the half, the Indians did not gain the lead until the 11-minute mark of the second period and then poured it on. Weak shooting (26%), violations, and bad passes combined to hold them back. They did recover, however, and shot close to 57% in the final frame. The game itself was rough and scruffy; technicals, shoving, and an angry punch marred the game.

The second game is scheduled for Friday night at Mont St. Louis at 7 pm. There are difficulties involved; the Georgian Coach wanted to postpone the game for various reasons including the fact that he seemed to want to import some seniors for the game. He was over-ruled by the Heads of Athletics both here and at Sir George. There is a chance that the concrete campusers will default but... It should be interesting.

OQAA hockey

Blues' Monteith wins scoring title

Steve Monteith of Toronto Varsity Blues has won his second Senior Intercollegiate Hockey League scoring championship in three years. The three-time all-star right winger ended the regular season with 27 goals and 33 assists for 60 points, three more than his younger brother and teammate Hank Monteith.

In his final game against McMaster Marlins, Steve scored four goals and assisted on two others to wrap up the title and also set his sixth League record of the season. The two assists brought his career total to 76, one more than the former mark set by one-time Laval Rouge et Or player Michel Lagacé.

In the process, however, Monteith lost one of five other records to his younger brother. Hank picked up five assists against McMaster to run his season total to 34, one more than his brother. Steve Monteith's five standing records are career goals (71), assists (76) and points (147) and season goals (27) and points (60).

Gary Bonney of Western Mustangs won goaltending honours, allowing an average of 2.88 goals per game and recording a League-leading two shutouts. Rolland Poltras of Montreal was second with 3.44 and the Toronto combination of Bill Stewart and Doug Dunning third with 3.50. Grant Moore of Toronto was the most penalized player, serving a record 84 minutes. Jim McKendry of McMaster followed with 69 minutes.

Toronto finished atop the standings with a 15-1 record for 30 points. Montreal was second with 26, Western third with 23 and Queen's fourth with 18. Montreal and Western meet in one semi-final game while Toronto and Queen's tangle in the other as part of a Friday afternoon double-header at Toronto's Varsity Arena. The winners meet for the Queen's Cup Saturday afternoon, also in Toronto.

This is the first year a four-team playoff is being held to determine the SIHL champion. The system was introduced after the League expanded to nine teams with the addition of Western and Guelph Redmen.
